The Bill to amend the registry law known as the Well's bill, which passed the House by the solid vote of the Republicans, against the solid vote of the Democrats, was rejected yesterday in the Senate, by a vote of 13 to 9. It is to be regretted, we think, that Republican Senators could not see the propriety of passing that measure. The bill simply provided that next fall and thereafter the boards of give the Democrats one member of each loard. This is so fair and reasonable a concession that we do not see how the refusal to make it can very well be defended. much to harmonize and unite Republicans preparatory to entering on the next camthe opposite effect. There is a very considerable portion of the Republican party of the State—much larger in reality than its share of representation in the Legislature—that does not look with favor upon all the features of the registry law, or upon the manner in which it has been administered in many counties. They believe that, in requirements the state of the registry law, or upon the manner in which it has been administered in many counties. They believe that, in common fairness towards our opponents, if not for our own protection against charges of maladministration, the Democrats ought to be allowed representation on the boards. We believe that some recognition of the views of that portion of the party, at the hands of the majority in the Legislature, would have been judicious. All the Republicans of the House were of that opinion. But the Senate is of a different opinion and they are responsible.

It will undoubtedly be forthcoming before or by the lat of March, which falls on Tuesday of next week.

Alluding of health of the selection of the Amendment for a new trial, the New York Sun gives utterance to a very generally entertained opinion, when it says that the only fault to be found with the tribunal which tried him is, that when it found the accused guilty it did not order him to be shot.
